when the afternoon breeze blows through the open window master chai loo's little chimes swing side to side sounding out many pleasant tunes. his favorite is the circle dance the little chimes play the circle dance by swinging around the back of the chime plates each one has a brilliant note to chime.

can you see imaginative little me she is the orange colored little chime?

whenever they can the little chimes play the circle dance for their grand old master he settles down on his colorful mats quietly entertaining his visitors.

listening to his happy little chimes. one evening as the breeze dropped and the visitors were leaving little me leaned over to tiny tea and said, wouldn't it be great tiny tea if we had another instrument for all of us to play we could make lots of new songs for master chalu tiny t cautiously agreed because everyone knew little me was always making up crazy ideas little t then leaned over to hydo and said it's probably little me's crazy imagination running wild the other chimes roll their eyes and say oh no?

not again but that didn't stop little me sometimes her imagination turned into!

great ideas suddenly she put her finger in the air and said i've got it we could get symbols and i could play them as we swing i would love to play symbols that's a great idea said hydo but where would we ever get symbols from i'll send a note to ebay for the symbols to be home delivered to our master?

the other chimes giggled with excitement they really liked little me's new idea.

as they were settling down for the night all the little chimes could talk about was little me's new idea little me shows the others with her hands how she would crash the symbols she will crash them right at the end of the circle dance.

later while everyone was asleep little me's imagination kept running wild she lay there imagining the little chimes playing before kings playing with a famous orchestra travelling around the world yes little me's imagination kept her awake well into the night she lay there staring out at the moon.

after days of anxious waiting for the postman the tiny symbols finally arrived. little me excitedly ripped open the parcel her friends peered over her shoulder.

can i have a go asked little t me too echoed funny far?

but little me was already lost in her imagination.

with wide open eyes she pushed her fingers through the holders on the cymbals the others swung back out of the way.

she raised her arms for the first big crash. crash! immediately their smiling faces turned to shock. wow!!

the birds took off with a fright jumped out the window.

the symbol crash scared everyone no one could stand that sound, except little me she thought it was great.

little t turned with her fingers in her ears and said i don't want my go after all. the little chimes huddled together in a circle to talk about this problem above the noise of the symbols little low doe was heard to say we'll have to send them back!

hydo then shouted as the huddle broke up let's play the circle dance first. he turned to everyone and whispered at least little me will have to quieten down until her big crash at the end of the song they all agreed with hydo they thought little me would wait at least until she knew it was her turn.

oh cool answered little me then they all agreed to play the circle.

dance as little me settled down the chimes began to play gently in the breeze they were getting ready to play their beautiful song when, crash crash crash little me couldn't help herself she was so excited. i can't wait she said no shouted angry ray but it sounds fantastic, she replied!

just wait your turn said angry ray. little me agreed with angry ray and folded her symbols in front of her chest she closed her eyes and waited her turn.

the little chimes started swinging and playing the circle dance they were playing beautifully when it came to little me's turn there was silence. little me was far away in her imagination she could see herself in the opera house. she was performing in front of a large audience applauding she was a star. wake up little me said little t it's your turn. but little me didn't hear because she was still bowing down to the large opera house audience.

in her mind. what a daydreamer whispered little t they all stood quietly watching little me waiting for her to open her eyes.

suddenly crash little me woke up from her daydream world!

angry ray raised his voice again and pointing out the window he shouted that's it they have to go. they all agreed something had to be done about the new musical instrument.

funny far was nominated to talk quietly with little me.

anxious moments went by as funny far and little me sat on the edge of the chime plate talking it over.

no one wanted to hurt little me's feelings but something had to be done to make all the little chimes happy again.

the others patiently waited for funny far and little me to work out this noisy problem.

after talking to little me for quite some time funny far suddenly lay back on his chime plate and started laughing.

someone shouted what is it funny far they all looked at each other waiting for funny far and little me. little low said little me must have another idea. angry ray shouted funny far will you stop laughing. everybody loves their imaginative little!

friend she did not cry when funny far spoke to her she did not selfishly throw the symbols down. she cooperated with her friends.

she let her imagination be open to all. and now the willing workers still sweep the carpets master chilu still entertains his friends and visitors but two of the little chimes look very different they are wearing little tin hats. all the chimes are very happy too and guess whose idea it was to turn the symbols into little hats. do you know? yes, it was little imaginative me. now everyone wants a turn?
